

Inner Declaration of Independence

I hold these truths to be self-evident. I am created whole, perfect and complete. I am endowed by my _____ with the inalienable right to a _____, _____ & _____ life.

Today, in my ____ year of life, I acknowledge that I've instilled beliefs, created rules, and made numerous life-choices. To the extent that these become destructive and/or no longer serve my journey to the aforementioned life, I have the right & power to alter and abolish them, therefore instituting a NEW journey toward my best life. Laying its foundation on such principles & values as _____, _____, _____ - which allow me to claim and make space for my divine endowment. I do not make such changes lightly, as I am indeed grateful for _____ and all the _____ that came as consequence.

As I understand the hills & valleys one must traverse in the trek of life, I understand too, that once made aware of a faulty path, an impenetrable forest or a deep ditch, one is obligated to consult her/his map and right the path toward liberty. It is my intention to be _____.

I therefore, representing and claiming power over my own life, declare that I am absolved from all allegiance to _____ and set my elevation towards _____. This declaration is made with a firm reliance on _____.

And so it is.
